New Every Morning

About 10 p.m. last night, I was on the computer and started laughing my head off. Jerry came to see what was going on.

All day long, I had been having an intermittent conversation with Naomi. She had posted a photo in the morning of Mary's stuffed Gertie and said that Super Gertie had made an appearance. Super Gertie was a superhero who periodically surfaced in our life with Mary's imaginative play, AnnaLeah's script-writing, and Levi's movie-making.

The only thing was that I didn't quite recognize her and wasn't sure why. So I kept making comments to Naomi and asking about the outfit. I assumed that Sam and Naomi had made it for her. I finally gathered that the outfit had been "with" Gertie at the time of the accident, which surprised me because we did have a lot of things with us but were trying to pack light—due to the length of time we'd be gone and all the things for the wedding, etc.

I finally concluded that Mary had brought it along--which emphasized how important Gertie was to her. But it still didn't make sense. So when I was on the computer before going to bed, I clicked on the photo to enlarge it and examined it more closely
